2015-16 Lecture Series

Justin Slocum Bailey, Indwelling Language

Latin's Best Decade?
The Unprecedented Promise of Teaching and Learning
Latin Today

Friday, November 13, 2015
4:00 p.m. • Weigley Room
(Gladfelter Hall 9th Floor)

About the Lecturer

Justin Slocum Bailey is a longtime teacher and learner of Latin and other languages. He is the founder of Indwelling Language, a collection of resources and habits that increase joy and success in language learning by helping teachers and learners live in the language and the language live in them. Justin grew up in Vienna, Austria, and now lives in Ann Arbor, Michigan, with his wife and two German-speaking children. When he’s not working with languages, he enjoys learning Jujutsu and lolling lakeside with his family.

In this presentation, Justin Slocum Bailey shares research and resources that allow Latin teaching and learning in the 2010s to be unprecedentedly successful and enjoyable. Justin also models teaching techniques that take advantage of the research and resources, and offers practical ways to incorporate them into existing curricula. Even if you’re not a Latinist, the presented research and techniques will inform your teaching and learning practices—and you’ll learn a little Latin along the way!